The Dragon, The Princess, and the Knight

It was a dark night, and it was snowing heavily. The mighty dragon was about to swallow the princess Rubí. The only knight capable of killing the dragon, whose name was Joseph, couldn't reach the castle in time to save the princess. In the very last moment, the dragon swallowed the princess.

In the Middle Ages, there was a dragon called Draug. This dragon was very large, heavy, and strong, worthy of fear. This dragon had slept for one hundred years, until now. Because the long dreams and spells that kept the dragon asleep don't last forever, they were finally over.

When the dragon awoke, he thought, "Now that I'm awake, I'll eat to restore all my powers and destroy all living creatures in this world." Then the dragon opened his wings and flew to the nearest kingdom, where he began a frightening battle.

All the knights in the kingdom were unable to stop the mighty dragon, so they had to call the most powerful and brave knight, Joseph the Brave, by tying a note to the paw of a raven and sending it to him.

The battle lasted for days, but Joseph did not appear. Meanwhile, Draug reached the tower where Princess Rubí was hidden. With his power, he threw a fireball from his mouth, setting the castle on fire. The princess had to escape.

And when the dragon saw her, he grabbed her by the legs with his claws.

It was a dark night, and it was snowing heavily. The mighty dragon was about to swallow the princess Rubí, and when the dragon did, the knight Joseph the Brave reached the kingdom to rescue her. But it might have been too late...

Instead of giving up, the knight wielded his sword, the mighty Glorious, and started an epic battle against the dragon. It took several hours, and the knight could have died, but he was brave and never surrendered.

Joseph fought with all his energy, using his strength and ability to take the advantage. In the precise moment, he gave the dragon's neck a clean cut, chopping off its head and killing it definitively. With his last remaining strength, the knight made a hole in the dragon's belly and freed the princess from her close death.

Now, the kingdom was safe, and in gratitude, the princess married Joseph the Brave, and they became King and Queen of the Kingdom. They lived happily ever after.

The End...
